Developer's plan to add to 1,000 homes 'appalling'

AMENDMENT GOES 'OVER AND ABOVE' AGREED LIMIT

The land on which the new homes will be built. Councillor Joel Charles (inset) wants the development to be rejected

By JAMES GREGORY

james.gregory@reachplc.com
@jgregorynews

A COUNCILLOR has said he is "appalled" by the conduct of a group of developers after they submitted a controversial application to increase the size of a 1,000-home project.

The plans, put forward by Persimmon Homes in conjunction with Bar-rat North Thomas and Taylor Wimpey, were given the go-ahead at a council meeting last Wednesday.

It means they can now push forward in building 592 dwellings - 143 more than was previously agreed.

The overall development will consist of 1,054 homes - construction has already started on 462 dwellings to the south of what is known as Linear Park.

In a bid to the development management committee, Councillor Joel Charles, who represents Old Harlow ward, urged members to reject the proposals because it went over and above what was agreed at a reserved matters hearing.

Speaking at the meeting, Cllr Charles said: "I am appalled by this planning application and I am appalled by the conduct of the developers who showed no courtesy to Old Harlow councillors originally when they proposed this amendment to the planning application and have singularly failed to contact me and my colleagues during this process.

"It is an utter disgrace and they should be ashamed of themselves given the controversial nature of this planning application."

Cllr Charles also pointed to the new builds as being "out of character" with the area's other houses and developments.

The scheme was recommended for approval by the planning officer because it would "provide significant additional benefits for relatively limited changes to the approved scheme, including the provision of 43 additional affordable units.

"The scheme will also provide uplifted contributions towards education provision, libraries and health-care", added the council report.

It has been met with criticism from residents, who feel that this is an over-development of the site and would pose a greater strain on infrastructure.

Despite several representations at the meeting the scheme was passed.

£20 debt 'led to newlywed husband being killed in fight outside pub'

By ALASDAIR HOOPER

alasdairhooper@reachplc.com
@adjhooper1992

A "GORGEOUS" husband died after being punched in a fight over a £20 debt, a court heard.

Andrew Watt, 48, from Harlow, suffered a traumatic head injury after an altercation outside the Poplar Kitten pub in Tawneys Road, Bush Fair, Harlow.

The incident took place at around 10.40pm on August 17, 2017 and saw police rush to the scene after receiving reports of an assault.

Mr Watt was airlifted to Addenbrooke's Hospital following the incident but died the next day.

Anton Collins, 26, and Jack Jordan, 24, have been charged with the manslaughter of Mr Watt and came before Chelmsford Crown Court for the start of their trial on Monday (January 21).

Collins also faces a second charge of causing actual bodily harm.

During prosecutor Andrew Jackson's opening speech, the court heard that the origins of the devastating event supposedly came about as one of Mr Watt's friends owed Collins' father, Chris, £20.

Addressing the jury, Mr Jackson said: "The pub where these events took place is called The Poplar Kitten, in Bush Fair in Harlow.

"Andrew Watt - the man who lost his life - was a Harlow man and he would often go to that pub with his friends after work.

"The defendant Anton Collins was also often to be seen in that pub as was his father.

"The defendant, Jack Jordan, does not seem to have been quite so much a regular as the others.

"A number of witnesses didn't know him whereas they knew Anton Collins."

Mr Jackson took the jurors through the day in question - August 17, 2017 - and the £20 that allegedly led to the fight that evening.

"Andrew Watt and a group of his friends went to the pub for a drink [that night]," the barrister said.

"They had all been working that day in Wimbledon in South London.

"His friend - Andrew Stephen - had borrowed a small amount of money from the father of Anton Collins.

"Chris Collins - his father - was also in the pub that night.

"Mr Stephen owed that small amount of money and it seems to have rather angered Anton."

He continued: "The first witness [in this trial] will be Mr Watt's friend Mr Stephen, the man that borrowed £20 from Anton Collins' father.

"He will tell you how they had been working that day in London, had gone back to Harlow and went to the Poplar Kitten.

"He will tell you he saw Anton Collins in the pub with another man who he didn't recognise.

"Plainly that must have been Jack Jordan.

"Anton Collins kept asking for cigarettes.

"All of them seemed to remain in the pub that night except for one of Mr Watt's friends who left earlier.

"By 10pm it seemed the defendants were intent on picking a fight with Mr Watt and his friends."

The jury were told by Mr Jackson that as the night went on, the two defendants made moves to fight both Mr Watt and Mr Stephen.

"Mr Watt and his friends were in one of the smoking huts and Anton Collins' father was sitting between Mr Watt and Mr Stephen," Mr Jackson said.

"Another witness - Ian Blake - says Mr Collins' father was trying to wind up Mr Watt and his friends.

"As he was doing that the defendants were standing at the entrance baiting Mr Watt and Mr Stephen.

"Anton Collins went over to say that's my dad - Mr Blake knew that.

"That's my dad' was a bit of a warning to tread carefully.

"Mr Blake then went back to the smoking hut and the defendants, by now, were asking Mr Watt and Mr Stephen to fight them.

"Neither of them wanted to and neither reacted, save for Mr Watt asking both of them why they were looking at him."

After describing the build-up, Mr Jackson then took the jury through the incident itself where Collins allegedly told Mr Watt to "shut up you little woman or I will kick you around the car park".

The prosecutor added: "Mr Watt stood up and Jack Jordan tried to take this further.

"He slapped him across

Police appeal after homes are burgled

Police have launched an appeal

POLICE are appealing for witnesses following two distraction burglaries in Harlow.

The incidents took place at addresses in Primrose Field and Harberts Road between 2pm and 3pm on Friday, January 18.

On each occasion, either one or two men would claim to be doing work on the water supply and that they needed to either change the pressure or turn the water to the premises off.

The men have been described as white, in their 20s, and wearing dark clothing with high visibility stripes.

Each time, after the men left, the victims realised money had been taken.

Police are asking anyone who recognise the descriptions of these men, or who may have seen them knocking on their doors in the area, to get in touch.

Anyone with CCTV footage is also asked to contact police.

People with information are asked to call 101 quoting crime reference numbers 42/9759/19 or 42/9859/19 or contact Crimestoppers anonymously on 0800 555 111.

Andrew Watt died following the incident outside the pub

the face.

"He then said, 'I am going to bury you, you c***'."

There then came a point when Mr Collins allegedly got in front of Mr Watt outside of pub.

"Two members of staff tried to get between them," said Mr Jackson.

"Mr Stephen tried to go and help his friend but Anton Collins dispatched him with one punch causing injury to his nose.

"That's the second charge [against Collins].

"Anton Collins then turned his attention back to Mr Watt with both of the defendants punching Mr Watt.

"The final punch appears to have been a rather heavy blow to Mr Watt's temple area."

The prosecutor explained to the jury that the 48-year-old was unconscious before he hit the ground, suffering the traumatic injuries that eventually led to his death.

Mr Watt was subsequently airlifted to Addenbrooke's hospital but the decision was soon made to turn off his life support machine.

He died at 2.15pm on August 18.

"As one of the eyewitnesses put it, he was poleaxed," Mr Jackson said.

"Mr Watt never regained consciousness."

In the aftermath of Mr Watt's death, his wife, Sarah, spoke publicly about the tragedy of losing her husband, who she had only been married to for eight weeks.

She said: "Tragically my best friend and gorgeous husband was taken away from me.

"We had only been married for eight weeks.

"Our wedding day was the most amazing day of our lives. He was the love of my life.

"Andy was the most infectious person I have ever known. He was loving, caring, funny, and a fantastic friend, brother, nephew and son.

"His friends and family are devastated, as am I, and we are going to miss him dearly."

The charges - Both Anton Collins and Jack Jordan are charged with manslaughter - both have pleaded not guilty.

Collins also faces one charge of causing actual bodily harm, which he also denies.

The trial at Chelmsford Crown Court is expected to last for five weeks and continued on Tuesday.

The Stansted Express service has seen a rise in the number of passengers fined
SAM MUKADAM

It's not fare! Call to extend Oyster scheme to airport

NUMBER OF STANSTED EXPRESS USERS CAUGHT WITH NO TICKET RISES BY 16K

By PIERS MEYLER
Local democracy reporter
piers.meyler@reachplc.com
@meyler123

THE number of people being hit with fines to and from Stansted Airport and London has increased by 16,000 in two years - increasing further pressure on the Government to extend Oyster cards to the Essex airport.

London Travelwatch, which released the figures, says passengers are mistakenly believing payments with Oyster and contactless cards are valid because the destination is badged as London Stansted.

It says the figures proved that Oyster and contactless payments should be extended to Stansted, one of just a few that has seen an increase in the number of public transport journeys.

Their demand follows on from the Mayor of London Sadiq Khan who has also called on the Government to extend the scheme from London Liverpool Street and Stratford to all stations to the airport, especially given it is less than two years until London hosts the semi-finals and finals of Euro 2020.

Currently Greater Anglia, which runs the lines to Stansted Airport through Bishop's Cleeve and Sawbridgeworth, as well as separate services to Hertford East, Cambridge and Essex, only has Oyster Card use up to Hertford East and Broxbourne.

Tim Bellenger, from London Travelwatch said: "Going up to 16,000 a year from virtually nothing in two years is a very large increase and it just shows how people, travelling to and from what is termed London Stansted, would generally expect the London ticketing and fare system to apply to an airport named with London as a prefix.

"It is particularly important given that Stansted is one of the only airports that has managed to increase the public transport proportion of journeys between 2012 and 2016. Those 16,000 people is an awful lot of people travelling by train who don't realise that an Oyster or contactless bankcard isn't valid for that journey."

Although passengers can tap on to a Stansted Express train at Liverpool Street, they must exit at Broxbourne or before if they are to avoid a penalty.

Stansted Express advertises advance tickets for as little as £7 - but those who cannot produce a valid ticket for inspection when required have to pay a minimum £20 penalty fare.

Mr Bellenger added: "They think it's a London airport and therefore think an Oyster is valid."

"You can use Oyster to Gatwick and Heathrow on Piccadilly or TfL rail. Being levied with a fine at Stansted is not terribly good if you are a visitor from overseas."

"What we'd like them to do is extend Oyster and contactless to Stansted. They've managed to do it for Gatwick. Technically it's feasible but it does require DfT to agree it. Extending Oyster would be the obvious thing to do to avoid these people being fined."

Stansted Airport recorded its busiest ever year as it welcomed over 28 million passengers in 2018, an increase of 2.1 million passengers and 8.1 per cent over the previous 12 months. It believes it will see around 43 million passengers per year by 2028.

A Greater Anglia spokesperson said: "We want all customers to have a positive experience when travelling with us. We are always looking for new ways to improve their journeys and will consider their feedback relating to the use of Oyster and contactless on other areas of our network."

The call to roll out the scheme to Stansted was made by the deputy mayor for London, Heidi Alexander who wrote to the Minister of State for the Department for Transport (DfT) Jo Johnson in October last year.

She wrote: "Given the success of contactless payment at Gatwick, and right across the London transport network, both the Mayor and I believe it is time that these same benefits are extended to those travelling to and from London from Luton Airport, Stansted Airport and Southend Airport."

"This would be especially important in time for Euro 2020, but equally it would benefit the thousands of passengers who use these airports every day. This includes not just tourists, but business and investors. Introducing greater flexibility and convenience would be a strong signal too that London is open for business, in a post-Brexit Britain."

A DfT spokesperson said: "We are committed to extending pay-as-you-go across the rail network, and are working with TfL to explore these proposals. We have already committed £80 million of investment to secure smart ticketing across all of the rail network, and will soon consult for views on how pay-as-you-go could be extended across the South East."

Attacker who hit victim over the head with a mug is sent to prison

A MAN has been jailed after attacking a hotel guest with a mug.

Aaron Bissmire, 30, of no fixed address, was found guilty of causing actual bodily harm (ABH) at Chelmsford Crown Court on Tuesday and was jailed for 12 months, with another year on licence.

Police were called to the Oasis Hotel on Hart Road, Harlow, just after 12.30am on August 18 last year after Bissmire forced entry into the room of a 35-year-old man staying at the hotel.

He then assaulted the victim by hitting him in the head with what was described as a mug.

After sentencing, investigating officer DC Joanna Snell said: "This assault resulted in the victim having to be treated in hospital for his injuries, which thankfully he is now recovered from.

"This sentence means that Bissmire is now having to deal with the consequences of his actions and will continue you to do so for the duration of this sentence."

Steve Lord died after a crash on the M11

Tributes paid to 'doting granddad' killed in crash

POLICE MAKE APPEAL FOR WITNESSES

By SOPHIE FINNEGAN

sophie.finnegan@reachplc.com
@sophiefinnegan

POLICE have formally named the motorcyclist who died in a crash on the M11 as his family paid tribute to the "doting grandfather".

Steve Lord, 63 and from Dunmow, died after a crash involving his motorbike and a car on the southbound carriageway between Stansted and Harlow at around 5am on Wednesday last week.

The M11 was closed north-bound until 2pm that afternoon while emergency services dealt with the incident.

In a statement, his wife Diane said: "Steve was a much-adored husband of 40 years, a proud father of two daughters, and a doting grandfather of two grandsons, aged three and one.

"He was a life-long motorcycle and classic car enthusiast. He had been riding and restoring motorcycles for 45 years, and had won a number of awards for restoring custom and classic cars.

"He was an active member of the Kawasaki Triples Club.

"Steve loved being surrounded by his family, especially his playful grandsons. He was aiming to retire in the coming years and planned to enjoy his free time with family, both at home and on holiday in Spain.

"He will be remembered for his warmth, his generosity, his storytelling, his generosity, and his wicked sense of humour. He will be sorely missed by everyone who knew and loved him.

"We'd like to thank our friends and family for their continued support, and would like to give a special thank you to Essex Police.

"In particular, we're grateful for the hard work of the Serious Collision Investigation Unit, and the care and compassion of our family liaison officers who have provided an invaluable service to us."

A 37 year-old man from Harlow has been arrested on suspicion of causing death by dangerous driving, failing to stop at the scene of a collision, and driving while under the influence of drink and drugs. He has been released on bail until February 11.

Police are continuing to appeal for anyone who saw, or has dash cam footage of, a blue Ford Focus and how it was being driven between Stansted Airport, the A120, the M11, and on the A414 at Harlow between 4.40am and 5.15am on January 16. If you have any information call Essex Police on 101 quoting incident 104 of January 16 or email collisionappeal@essex.pnn.police.uk.

Fish and chip shop launches a vegan version

CUSTOMER PERSUADED OWNER TO TRY IT OUT

By AARON MAYHEW

newsdesk@essexlive.news

A HARLOW fish and chip shop has launched an "amazing" vegan night.

Luigi's Fish & Chips, on The Stow, began serving vegan fish and chips on Thursday, January 10 and say it is thanks to a determined vegan.

The owner of Luigi's, Tony Forgiione, 44, said Pam Walker guided them in the right direction and "without her help it would have been very difficult".

He added: "She was our guinea pig, so I'd like to thank her."

Pam, 53, has been for vegan for two years and said: "I told the manager, John 'the way forward is do vegan fish and chips, it's massive' and jokingly said 'this time next year you'll be a millionaire'."

"I was persistent with it, I'd send him photos of vegan food in supermarkets."

"I think it shows you can make a change and a difference."

Unlike vegetarians, who only cut out meat and fish, veganism is a lifestyle that does not involve any animal produce at all with dairy products, eggs, wool, leather and any other animal-derived food or products excluded.

Pam and the shop's manager, John, worked on the recipe with a trial and error process.

The final result was banana blossom marinated for 48 hours in seaweed, lemons, oils and paprika, then coated in a gluten free beer batter.

Tony described the launch as having "a party atmosphere" and said: "I was very surprised how many people took it up and also the good feedback we had."

"It was amazing. People were saying it was the best thing they'd eaten in eight years. I've had it and it's even made me think maybe this is the way forward."

Tony added that the vegan option will be trialled in two of his other shops.

Pam explained why she went vegan, saying: "I was travelling on the London Underground and as I looked up at the advertising there was 'Veganuary'."

"I have a passion now, there's no way I'd go back and it's a lot easier now, because it's everywhere."

Veganuary is a charity which inspires people to try veganism for January.

Since 2014, 250,000 people in 193 countries have taken part.

Pam said: "Veganuary is a great time to do it because a lot of the chains are getting on board with it. "Now most pizza places like Pizza Hut and Zizi's all do vegan cheese."

"It's never been easier to try it, it's in every supermarket and restaurant and now it's in the local fish and chip shop."

Dominika Piasecka, a spokesperson for the Vegan Society, said: "We're delighted to learn that Luigi's Fish and Chips sell vegan fish and chips."

"Vegan fish is cruelty-free and lower in saturated fat, as well as being an environmentally-friendly choice."

"The number of vegans in Britain has quadrupled over the last four years and it's great to see that the people of Harlow have a chance to find out what all this excitement with vegan food is about."

Luigi's was first opened in 1989 and is co-owned by the Forgiione brothers: Lib, Luigi and Tony.

Councillors to vote on pay increase

IT WOULD BE THEIR FIRST ALLOWANCE RISE SINCE 2010

By JAMES GREGORY

james.gregory@reachplc.com
@jgregorynews

COUNCILLORS will decide on whether to allocate more money for themselves as part of Harlow Council's budget shake-up.

The budget proposals outline the administration's financial plans for the coming year. There is a provision for a proposed increase of £8,000 in the overall allowances budget for councillors – almost five per cent up on last year's budget of £178,510.

Councillors are not paid a formal salary but they are afforded basic allowances to compensate them for their time spent on council business.

Cabinet members are given special responsibility allowances to cover their expenses in carrying out their extra duties. If approved at a separate full council meeting on February 7, it would be the first increase in basic councillor allowance since 2010.

The proposal from the independent remuneration panel is that the basic allowance would increase by five per cent and the special responsibility allowances by two per cent from April 1, meaning those on basic allowance would see their pay rise from £4,270 per year to £4,485.

Those in the cabinet would see an increase of £57 from the previous year.

Council leader Mark Ingall will get an allowance increase of more than £100 if it is approved. But the council says that even with these increases, allowances received by Harlow councillors will remain among the lowest of any comparable council and are significantly lower than the basic allowance of £12,000 afforded to Essex County Councillors each year.

Leader of the council Mark Ingall said: "I want to assure people that if these increases are agreed, it will not be at the expense of services."

"If we had to cut a single service or activity to fund these increases, we would not even be having the discussion."

"As it is, the increases, if agreed, will be funded out of money set aside in our budget and there will be no impact to residents or our staff."

"The independent panel initially recommended that councillors receive a 15 per cent increase on the basic allowance when they benchmarked Harlow's allowances against other councils, however I am very mindful of the rightful sensitivity to any increase and so I argued that the increase should be reduced to 5 per cent. Of course how council tax payers' money is spent is very important and the recommendations of the panel must be the subject of a debate in full council."

"The work of a councillor involves attending meetings and taking part in panels, meeting with and representing residents, and spending considerable time understanding the complex issues that are crucial to decisions taken by the council."

"The allowance covers costs incurred in the performance of these duties, for example travel and child care, as well as providing some remuneration for the time invested. Without councillor allowances, many people would not be able to afford to perform these tasks and we do not want a situation where only the wealthy are able to represent our residents."

There are also plans to create 11 new apprenticeships who will be paid the voluntary living wage foundation employer rate of £9 an hour.

There will be no cuts to council services such as the parks and playgrounds and paddling pools as well as the street carnival.

And the council plans to increase council tax by two per cent which works out at an extra 9p a week, or £4.84 a year, for a Band C household.

Councillor Mark Ingall, leader of Harlow Council

Residency in Las Vegas? I'm happier doing a gig at the Playhouse

MARTIN NEAL meets West End stage, chart and TV star Barbara Dickson who is looking forward to performing in Harlow in the spring

A HIGH-PROFILE residency playing to the rich and famous in the glitz and glamour of Las Vegas? Forget it – singing legend Barbara Dickson is coming to Harlow Playhouse on her next tour and she couldn't be happier.

The Scottish songstress has spent over 50 years performing and recording, with smash hit stage shows, top 20 singles and popular TV shows to her name.

She's a two-time Olivier Award-winning actress and was awarded an OBE for services to music and drama.

But as she explained to the Harlow Star ahead of her date at the Playhouse on March 5, she's certainly not one to go swanning around, living the pop star life.

"I'm coming to Harlow near the end of the tour, it's about five dates from the end of the final bit," she explained, "because we kick off on February 1.

"It's a 28-date tour this time. Last time we did 21 and I said to the promoter 'I was just getting warmed up when we had to stop' so he's put all these other dates in as well for this one.

"But it will be great. You get a momentum, there's no doubt about it, if you look after yourself, which I tend to do these days on tour."

Now 71, she's still putting a remarkable amount of energy into her shows, which feature songs from throughout her long and varied career.

"I've been doing headline concerts for over 40 years – the first one was in 1977 – and I've been a professional musician for 50 years," she said. "I've never earned a penny by any other means so I consider that quite an achievement.

"It's not all been done by me by any means, but because of the sort of person I am, I came from folk music and went in through the back door into the theatre, came out of the theatre and became a pop star. I came out of pop through the back door and starting singing an amalgamation of songs from all over the place, and that's really what I do now.

"There's some folk music, some 20th century music, a song by James Taylor, a Beatles song, traditional music from all over the British Isles, a couple of songs from the theatre.

"I keep myself occupied because I'm playing the guitar, playing the piano, I've got an Indian harmonium with me this time and I'll be jumping up and down and taking guitars over my head!

"I'm not a woman in a long dress with an orchestra. It's a serious attempt to do what I've done for 50 years."

That back door entrance to the theatre came via her friendship with Willy Russell and ultimately led to a starring role in Blood Brothers in the West End and being signed to sing on the cast album recording of Chess, which featured the hit No 1 single I Know Him So Well with Elaine Paige – still the biggest selling single by a female duet.

"Willy Russell was my pal from folk music," she said, "and he wrote a play about The Beatles.

"He had this inspired idea that I should sing the music in it, and that was what took me to the theatre in Liverpool.

"Nobody knew me because I was a jobbing folk singer. But then I ended up in London singing in Shaftesbury Avenue and everyone went 'who is this person?'

"There's no top and bottom in folk music so suddenly I found myself in a different world."

That world made her a household name with a host of acclaimed performances, a string of hit singles and 15 UK chart albums.

But she said: "From 1985 until now I haven't had a hit single but I don't really care. I've been able to carve a career for myself doing what I want to do. My goodness, that is unusual!

"Being able to do what you want to do without being leaned on by other people to do something you really don't want to do – I've never had to go to the jungle, I've not had to do the things that other people do because I'm not prepared to have attention at any price. I don't care about that, I'm not interested in things like that. I'd feel humiliated doing stuff like that. I'm not an old pop star, that's not what I do.

"I sing and play the guitar and I'm still looking for songs I've got a new song that I've written in the show. I'm a creative person and I'm interested in staying that way."

Barbara says her OBE, awarded in 2002, and her two Olivier Awards are special but insists: "It doesn't define me. I don't care about that.

"As long as people come along and see me play and are interested in what I'm doing and allowing me, by their interest, to make records, write and do interesting things, then I am very happy.

"I was never very happy in the West End. I liked the work and the shows but I never really enjoyed doing eight shows a week in London. I found it difficult because I'd never lived in London when I was doing that, so I was living on my own in flat, very often separated from my family.

"I was never happy. It was a means to an end. Concerts are where I feel happier because I'm doing my own thing and I'm only doing it for a maximum of six weeks.

"I don't do world tours. My musical director does do world tours with his band Nightwish, from Finland, and he's away for months. I would never have liked to do that.

"Years ago my manager tried to get me to go and live in America. I said 'why would I want to do that?' It's not important to me. I am very different to most people – I don't have that kind of ambition.

"I'm not ambitious. I wouldn't want to do a show in Las Vegas for two years. I've never wanted to do it. I would be thoroughly miserable because I'd want to be able to do something else and I wouldn't be able to do it.

"The guidance and advice of record companies and managers is OK if you want to do what they say.

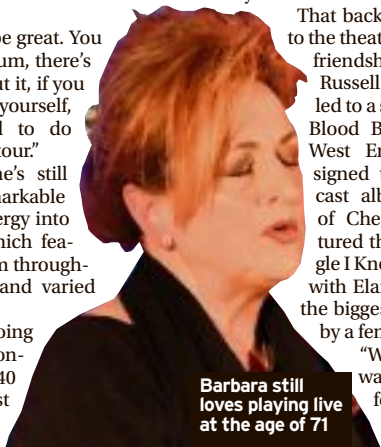

"They're trying to make you a success, but I didn't want to be a success on those terms. I just wanted to make a living and be artistic and creative seriously.

"My proudest achievement is that I managed to have a family. I've got three grown-up sons and a husband, and I've only ever been married once. I'm rather pleased about that."

Closure threat to scout group is an injustice

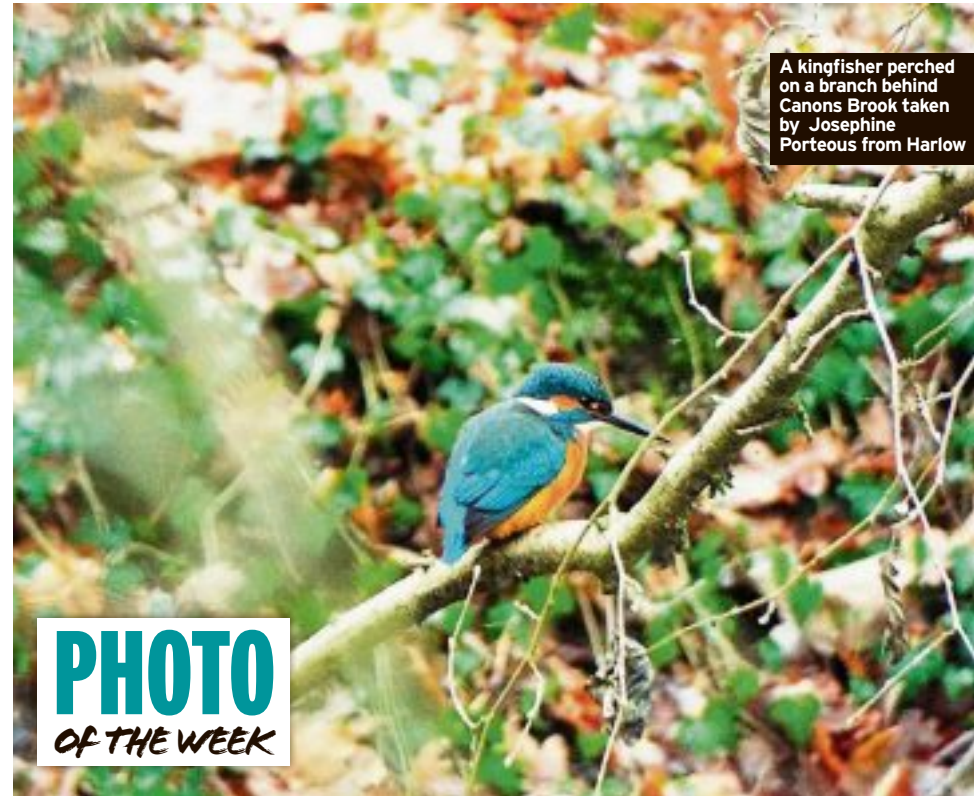

I WANTED to write to show my support for the 1st Great Parndon Scout Group. After having been threatened with closure by the district commissioner at the end of last year, I met with some of the group's leaders to hear about the reasons why they are being closed – and what I, and fellow local representatives can do to support the group in light of the devastating news, and what I felt was an absolute injustice for the parents and children, of which the group has become such an important and invaluable part of their lives. Speaking to the leaders and the parents of children who attend the 1st GP Scouts displayed to me the importance of groups like this, and the sense of community and comradeship was massively heartwarming for me to see. The group is run by dedicated and passionate people who are truly making a difference, and for the children that go along – who have made friends and learned important life skills – you can tell how much of a positive impact it has, especially in times when other services for young people have been cut and run into the ground. Although the group has now been re-opened, the ongoing discussion with the District Commissioner is not over, and I will make sure to do everything I can to help support the 1st GP Scout Group in order for them to continue their brilliant work – for the children, the parents and the community they have created.

Unfair car parking fines dished out

IN the past few weeks there have been numerous complaints from

A kingfisher perched on a branch behind Canons Brook taken by Josephine Porteous from Harlow

shoppers who despite having Asda vouchers for a parking fee discount and used them at the appropriate machine have subsequently been sent a letter informing them of a fine for non payment. This has led to many people paying fines that they do not owe, or them risking an additional late fee charge for non payment of a fine that is incorrectly issued by the company.

It appears that shoppers are unaware of the problem until they receive the fine notice. There have been a lot of noticeable comments this past two week on Harlow Bargains page and I imagine other patrons of the Water Gardens parking space would have had similar notices.

Some people have challenged the fines and had them written off while others have not been so lucky.

One comment on HB site says that the staff are fully aware that there has been a fault with the machine yet the fine notices are still being issued.

Surely this is unfair to say the least.

I say deal with the bigger picture rather than trying to blind us with your rose tinted glasses.

Get your house and priorities in ORDER!

Your dustmen leave more rubbish in the streets than the litter louts, your drivers flick cigarettes out of HTS vans, we have cracked pavements which are dangerous, but yet you worry about a beauty spot.

We are fed up with you covering over these serious issues.

You half heartedly do a repair which needs doing again and again. Yes it's all at our expense, why not do it properly the first time?

You have evening meetings which give you a nice big overtime pay check but it seems whatever the residents want you are not interested in and have already made your minds up on what YOU want... NOT what the people want which make those meetings pointless.

I for one am fed up!

Bus cuts in Harlow will 'hit the vulnerable the hardest', says Labour

Help if we had a decent bus service with buses going to train station on regular basis. If my wife and I wish to go out and take a train its either two buses from Staple Tye, one to town generally and then change and get another to the station. Alternative, which costs about £1-2 more or may not if you pay for 2nd bus, is a mini cab which takes you door to door. This town has the worse bus service around.

Craig Messenger

Simple solution here. Years ago there was the T31 night bus. Left the town station after 11 and looped the whole town. Bring that back to run at 10.30 and 11.30. Less buses less drivers but peeps can still get about.

An out of this world experience as pupils borrow a piece of the moon

'THE WAY THE CHILDREN REACTED TO IT REALLY BROUGHT SCIENCE ALIVE'

CHILDREN attending BMAT schools in Harlow have been given a once-in-a-lifetime experience thanks to BMAT STEM Academy.

The school – dedicated to science, technology, engineering and maths – is one of a select few in the country to borrow a piece of the moon.

Working with the Science and Technology Facilities Council, the school took part in the Lunar Rocks and Meteorites Loan Scheme which enabled it to borrow NASA moon rock discs and meteorites for five days.

Students from BMAT STEM, Burnt Mill Academy, Roydon Primary Academy and Cooks Spinney Primary Academy all got the chance to work with the samples.

Kendra Paho, Year 5 pupil from Roydon, said: "It has been really interesting and cool. We got to see the moon right in front of us and find out more information about it. It was fascinating."

Michael Clark, head-teacher at Roydon, said: "We always love to offer the children the best possible life experiences and to see a part of the moon was one the children loved. We want to thank BMAT STEM Academy for having us again."

"The children took a lot from the morning."

Students from BMAT STEM, Burnt Mill Academy, Roydon Primary Academy and Cooks Spinney Primary Academy all got the chance to work with the samples

Year 10 GCSE astronomy students from BMAT STEM used the visit of the meteorites and samples brought back from Apollo missions to enhance their studies.

Paul Andrew, assistant head and science teacher at BMAT STEM, said: "The main reason we wanted to take part was for our astronomy students to be able to look at moon-based rock which they would not otherwise get to see.

"They have been able to handle it for themselves which helps to give their studies context.

"These samples have come all the way from the moon which is an absolute wow moment for them.

The samples are irreplaceable and priceless.

"It has been brilliant to share this with students. It has been lovely to see them so interested and engaged and doing something different.

"Seeing the way the children reacted to it really brought science alive.

"That is what it is about for me, making science real while doing something they can enjoy.

"One primary school pupil said she didn't want to leave."

Secondary school students looked at the samples under a microscope, while primary school pupils learnt how to differentiate between earth and space-bound rocks using their science knowledge.

Students' historic Parliament visit

PASSMORES Academy students got the opportunity to visit the House of Parliament recently.

The students received a tour of both the House of Commons and the House of Lords and got to watch them debating Brexit.

They saw the Chancellor Phillip Hammond be quizzed on the effect that Brexit would have on the economy.

They then met Robert Halfon and students were able to ask him questions about his role as an MP and also issues to do with Harlow, such as the gridlocked roads and the number of police officers.

Students finally participated in a debating workshop where they debated whether the voting age should be lowered to 16.

The students confirmed that they had a fabulous day.

Ms Le Dain, who ran the trip, said: "The students were absolutely fantastic - completely well behaved, engaged and wonderful ambassadors for the school.

"It was such an amazing trip and a real opportunity for the students to be there at this historical time."

Be a Compassionate Neighbour and help to tackle social isolation

St Clare Hospice, in Hastingwood, is calling on local people to help them improve the lives of others through its growing community-led social connection programme, Compassionate Neighbours.

The award-winning programme, founded by St Joseph's Hospice in East London in 2011, is now established in eight hospices across the UK.

St Clare is using Compassionate Neighbours to tackle social isolation and loneliness for those living with a life-limiting illness throughout West Essex and East Herts.

However, this relies on the support of local people to give an hour a week towards helping others in the community. These generous volunteers regularly offer their time, companionship and a listening ear to their matched community members.

The project at the West Essex and East Herts charity has successfully recruited 47 Compassionate Neighbours and is on track to reach its ambitious target of recruiting 64 volunteers by the end of March.

Now St Clare is calling on caring members of the public from the Uttlesford District, Bishop's Stortford, Sawbridgeworth, Harlow and Epping Forest areas, to come forward and join the ranks of its volunteers.

Harry Weldon from Harlow has already benefited from the project. He meets weekly with his Compassionate Neighbour, Dave Austin from North Weald, during which time the pair enjoy spending time together at Harry's home or out in local community.

passionate, supportive environment at St Clare Hospice when he was attending a day therapy group.

The following year he was told about the Compassionate Neighbours project.

"It's been good," he said. "I have enjoyed having Dave as a partner, he's a really nice bloke. I think we have a similar sense of humour and we like similar things."

"Before I had a Compassionate Neighbour, I wasn't getting out at all, but Dave has given me confidence and shown me that I can try different things now."

Harry continued: "Compassionate Neighbours has also helped me to get back to doing the things that I love."

"I love fishing, and it is something that has always been a part of my life. But I stopped when I couldn't get out of the house easily."

"It had been a few years since I had fished when Dave suggested that we should try going together. He drove us to a local fishing lake and we parked up.

"I don't think Dave had really fished much before, so I showed him what to do. It was lovely in the sun. We were there for hours."

The programme has also helped Harry to do things without Dave.

"I have even been fishing with my brother-in-law, too, now," he explained. "Compassionate Neighbours has helped to give me the confidence I needed."

"I would say to anyone thinking of getting involved with the Compassionate Neighbours project to give it a go. Compassionate Neighbours has really helped me."

St Clare's Compassionate Neighbours manager, Stacey Towler, said: "The service will celebrate its first birthday here at the hospice in February, and by then we will have supported at least 65 community members who were experiencing loneliness and social isolation - which is fantastic."

"In 2019, we will be celebrating the real difference that the programme has made to local people, and looking to continue developing and expanding our reach so that no one has to feel lonely in the last chapter of their life within our community."

"We, as residents of West Essex and East Herts, have the power to ensure that the project continues to make a difference by giving just one hour a week and becoming a Compassionate Neighbour. Will you join us?"

New volunteers will be provided with a full training programme, free of charge.

The training courses are informal, fun and inspirational, giving volunteers the opportunity to explore how they can use their compassion to help others and give them the confidence to support people in their community.

You must be over 18 to volunteer for this service.

St Clare Hospice will carry out a relevant DBS check and you must be willing to give up your time on a regular basis.

New charity shop manager keen to hear from volunteers

KEVIN Stocker, 59, is the new manager at St Clare Hospice's flagship charity shop at the St James Centre in Harlow.

He brings with him extensive retail experience, having been a self-employed sole trader selling collectables and antiques for more than 25 years, and, more recently, a manager of the Old Harlow branch of Sue Ryder Care.

As part of Kevin's role, he manages a team of five part-time staff and 30 enthusiastic volunteers in the shop.

More than 230 people, aged 16-92, give their time to volunteer in St Clare's eight charity shops every year, offering their invaluable help in sorting donations, providing excellent customer service and maintaining the shop floor.

Kevin said: "We are always looking for volunteers to cover a variety of shifts throughout the week and I'm keen to hear from those who have volunteered in the past at the Harlow shop who might be interested in volunteering again."

Kevin, who was born and raised in Harlow and has always lived in the area, said about his new appointment: "I'm very proud to have been given the opportunity to work for such a great local charity which provides amazing care for people in Harlow."

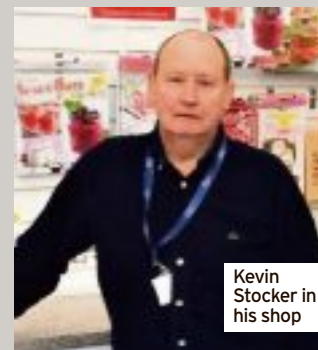

"As manager, I want to help make St Clare Harlow an even better place to shop, work and volunteer. St Clare Harlow is a great place to shop with bargains for all the family."

"You can dress the family for under £10 per person and still have money left over for CDs, DVDs and a few kids' toys."

St Clare Hospice's Harlow shop is currently recruiting for more volunteers to help in the store at Unit 2A, St James Centre, East Road, Harlow, CM20 2BJ.

To find out more, contact St Clare's Voluntary Services Manager, Rob Wallace, on 01279 773722 or email rob.wallace@stclarehospice.org.uk or apply online at stclarehospice.org.uk/volunteervacancies/shop-volunteer-harlow/

CELEBRITIES JOIN FUNDRAISER FOR GREAT ORMOND STREET HOSPITAL

By JULIA BRIGUI

A HARLOW teenager was among a group of students who enlisted the help of TV presenters and reality stars to take part in a celebrity football match in aid of Great Ormond Street Hospital.

The quartet, who are in their second year at Writtle University College, were challenged with running their own sports event as part of their Level 3 Performance and Excellence course.

Gracey Dorling, 17, from Harlow; Niamh Wilson, 17, Morgan Burns, 18, and Alex Chilvers, 17 all from Chelmsford, wanted to "go big" with their event and chose to raise money for Great Ormond Street Hospital and staged the match at Harlow Town FC's ground in Elizabeth Way.

Gracey explained: "Great Ormond Street Hospital helps take care of 618 children who visit the hospital per day. They strive to better the lives of the patient and their families.

"I have had the first-hand experience of their support due to my younger brother being unwell and was referred to the hospital.

"They allowed us to meet other families affected by the same illnesses as my brother and they gave us counselling sessions in order to help us cope."

The group asked Harlow Town Football Club if they could use the ground as a venue for a celebrity football match. Shannon Toms, director of operations at the club worked with the students and offered the venue free of charge.

"This was incredible considering we were low on funds due to being college students," Gracey added.

The celebrity team was managed by former Liverpool, Spurs and England star Neil 'Razor' Ruddock and his fellow Enfield FC coach Lee Hanning.

Celebrity players included Spencer Owen and Harry Hashtag Heskeith from Hashtag United, TV presenters Jeff Brazier and Rob Lamarr, former footballers Ross Weare, Jonathan Fortune and Dean Holness, 2012 Apprentice winner Ricky Martin, comedian David Alfie Ward and reality TV stars, Chet (Sket) Johnson and Dan Osbourne.

The opposing Harlow XI side was managed by Harlow Town boss

Danny Chapman and a had mix of Harlow Town legends including Marc Salmon, Mario Noto and Ed Thompson.

The students also partnered with the Essex Senior League who were able to use their contacts and funding to sponsor the event and supply the celebrity team with their kit.

League secretary, Michelle Dorling was a huge help to the students and Gracey said: "Her professionalism and experience of organising events really helped, she emailed celebrities to gather their attention to the game and confirm their involvement."

The event has been hailed a great success with a crowd of over 720 attending to see the Harlow XI narrowly beat the Celebrity XI 5-4.

At the time of going to press, the team of students had raised around £2,000 for Great Ormond Street Hospital.

"We are extremely grateful to those who came down and supported us on the evening, we would also like to thank Essex Senior League and Harlow Town massively for partnering with us on this event," added Gracey, "as without them we would have struggled to put the event on."

Trust's second Fab Change accolade

STAFF at Princess Alexandra Hospital Trust are celebrating after winning a national award that recognises energy, leadership and vision in healthcare.

The trust has now been crowned Fab Change Champion Organisation for the second year in succession.

Princess Alexandra Hospital Trust (PAHT) won the accolade from the Academy of Fabulous stuff – a social movement for sharing health and social care ideas, services and solutions that work.

The Fab Change Champion Organisation title was an especially momentous success in the NHS 70th anniversary year.

Living up to the Fab Change 70 challenge, the trust met the NHS 70 landmark by showcasing a tremendous 70 improvement projects taking place around the trust which are making a difference to patients and their families.

These range across all service areas of the hospital and were showcased to the public at the trust's AGM in September. Now staff have received recognition by the Academy, whose aim is to encourage organisations to make changes that together create a momentum for improved healthcare.

The diverse range of projects across the trust has an impact for the youngest through to the oldest patients.

A poll within the trust for top projects resulted in five winners.

These included an app to help children overcome anxiety at having to come to hospital, through to a dementia garden near to a ward dedicated to frail elderly patients and those at the end of their lives.

Staff who attended a presentation ceremony were particularly honoured to receive the award from the chief executive of NHS England, Simon Stevens, as well as the co-founders of the Academy of Fabulous Stuff, Roy Lilley and Dr Terri Porrett.

Mr Stevens stated: "This award is presented to the trust whose energy, leadership and vision has empowered staff to put their ideas into action and have embedded quality improvement as 'the norm' throughout their organisation."

Chief Executive of Princess Alexandra Hospital Trust, Lance McCarthy, praised staff for their consistent hard work in achieving the success for the second time.

He said: "To win once was fantastic but a second win shows the tremendous depth of the commitment of all our staff to ongoing improvements in our services for all of our patients."

CASHING IN

Beware of lawyers handling your estate

IN ASSOCIATION WITH

Which?

Q MY mother died in 2013. Her will divided her estate between her four children (including me). The will was drawn up in 1997 by a solicitor who soon after retired. His firm was taken over by another which provided the will's sole executor, who paid herself £6,000 plus VAT (£7,200). We were not told of this. But then her firm collapsed.

She found other legal work and took our files with her. But she is not allowed to handle client money. It appears now she has hired the leading partner in the new firm to finish the work. He has somehow contrived to take another £10,000 from the estate and now charges £275 an hour. But he says we have no rights as his client is the other lawyer.

In the meantime, we have inheritance tax and capital gains tax problems while my mother's home, which we need to sell, is not being maintained.

The Solicitors Regulatory Authority has not helped. We cannot fund private litigation. What should we do?

Shelly R

A EVERYONE with assets to pass on should make a will. It saves the many problems of intestacy (dying without a will) and allows the will maker to set out their wishes.

Be careful of naming executors. Professionals such as lawyers or banks can charge what they like, perhaps excessive amounts. Family and friends cannot take fees. Lawyers often advertise free or low cost wills but write themselves in as executors knowing they can make big money later on. Refuse to do this - there are plenty of other will-writing services including charities.

If you have a will naming a bank or solicitor, tear it up and start again - even if the professional is still around. You should anyway revise wills often - family, friends and favoured charities can change.

Non-professionals can either carry out probate themselves (if it's simple - there is online help) or appoint a fixed fee firm of probate lawyers (search Probate Brokers) to do the work for you. Which? Legal 0117 405 4283 - has a probate helpline. In your case, find a no win, no fee professional negligence solicitor to act for you - your problem is complex but your present lawyers may think twice when they see expertise on your side. A successful action would see your current probate team (or their insurers) having to fork out for

Q I AM a 65-year-old woman confused and angry regarding my state pension. With the age going up again, will I now have to wait until I'm 66 to get mine?

A THE constant tweaking and age changes are making it impossible for people to plan properly. And it's unfair, as phased-in age rises mean that you may have to wait months longer than someone even born in the same month as you, depending on your date of birth.

Currently those born in 1954 will reach state pension age between the age of 65 and 66. Someone born between January 6 and February 5, 1954, will reach state pension age on May 6 this year, while being born between February 6 and March 5, 1954, means not getting the state pension until July 6 this year.

Q I'VE had lots of problems with my energy supplier and my bills. They kept changing my direct debit level and I've ended up in a little debt.

Can I switch supplier when I owe them money?

A IF you've been in debt to your supplier for over 28 days, you'll need to repay that first. However, if it's your supplier's fault you're in debt, I believe they can't stop you from switching.

Q I'VE been getting lots of calls offering me ISAs and other investment reviews. I thought cold calling was now banned?

A IN general, cold calling is still legal. But this month a pensions cold-calling ban came into force. However, crooks will now use other financial products and services as a way to try to lure you out of your savings. So put the phone down on any cold calls.

Q I THINK there is a Child Trust Fund account somewhere for my child. How can I find out where it is and can I contribute to it?

Immediately put the phone down on any cold callers

A GO online to gov.uk and put Child Trust Fund into the search. You will be led through the process of tracking down the provider. You can contribute up to £4,260 per year into a CTF, although transferring the funds into a Child ISA will give you better rates of interest.

Q I HAVE an overdraft I'm struggling to repay and it's costing me a lot in interest and charges. I'm thinking of putting it onto a new 0% credit card deal or my existing card. What's best?

A THE best way to clear an overdraft is a 0% money transfer credit card as you can move funds into your bank account via one of these.

Using cash from your existing card will incur high charges unless the firm is offering a 0% deal - also you risk ending up in a financial muddle if you were to use the card firm for two different purposes.

BOOKSHELF

At times, I was scared... amid burning oil drums at roadblocks, youngsters jabbering away with Kalashnikovs

BESTSELLING novelist and ex-ITN reporter Gerald Seymour, whose thrillers about spies, undercover agents and terrorist threats have attracted legions of fans, chuckles as he recounts some of the close shaves he's had during his career.

"There were a few times when I felt scared," he admits, laughing. "But it wasn't about being among 'whizzbangs' so much as being on lonely roads, perhaps just myself and a driver, say in Lebanon at night amid burning oil drums and roadblocks, and windows wound down and youngsters jabbering away with Kalashnikovs, and not understanding a word. That was the most unnerving thing."

As a reporter, he covered events in trouble spots including Vietnam, Israel and Northern Ireland, as well as the Great Train Robbery and the Munich Olympics massacre in 1972.

He recalls being asked by an American army lieutenant near the Cambodian border in south Vietnam if he would help man the machine gun in the event of an attack. He politely declined.

Much of the tension he has experienced in front-line reporting has been transferred into his fictional stories, which began in 1975 with Harry's Game, later made into a TV mini-series.

He has retained that suspense and tension in his 35th novel, Battle Sight Zero, which follows the path of a Kalashnikov assault rifle from its manufacture in 1957 through six decades as it changes hands, to make its way in 2018 to wreak havoc on the streets of Britain.

At the heart of the story is the relationship between a Muslim girl from Dewsbury answering the terrorist call and the undercover agent tasked with infiltration.

AS HIS 35th BOOK IS PUBLISHED, WAR REPORTER-TURNED THRILLER WRITER GERALD SEYMOUR TELLS HANNAH STEPHENSON HE'S GLAD HE'S NOT ON THE FRONTLINE TODAY

Gerald has held – but never fired – an AK47 in the Middle East and says the weapon has a worldwide reputation – people know how much devastation it can cause.

"I spent most of my adult life being aware of the Kalashnikov, having seen it through all my time in the Middle East, in Vietnam and in Northern Ireland. More recently, we've seen the carnage with the Kalashnikovs at the concert in Paris."

At 77, Gerald shows no sign of slowing down. He has produced, on average, a book a year since he gave up his reporting career to become a novelist in the Seventies.

"There had been the launch of The Day Of The Jackal. I knew of Frederick Forsyth.

"In Fleet Street and the broadcasting studios, there were reporters thinking they'd have a go. There was a genuine feeling that Forsyth had moved the whole world of thriller-writing on from Alistair MacLean and Hammond Innes.

"I came back from the Middle East war, the kids were at school, the office said I was to take three weeks off, so I thought I'd have a go," he recalls.

His debut, Harry's Game, became an instant bestseller. "It was a very easy ride," Gerald reflects, still surprised. "It frightened the hell out of me, because of what I was going to do for the next one."

Today, he and his wife, Gillian, live in the Thames Valley and have two sons and three grandchildren.

"It's part of that thing that keeps you switched on and humble and able to see other generations' point of view. I value that."

Does he miss the fast-paced world of TV news reporting?

"I miss the craic and laughter and gallows humour of the rat pack, but thank God, I'm too old for that now," he says.

He reckons front-line reporting has become more dangerous than it used to be.

"In my day, we thought that somehow we could talk our way through, and I don't think that exists any more. In fact, if you were in Syria in recent years, it's quite a coup (for the terrorists) if they got their hands on you. It's more dangerous."

He also feels society has become less shocked by atrocities: "We don't have the shock horror factor that we would have done 30 years ago. That means that the reporters' and cameramen's lives are in some sense cheapened."

These days, he's quite happy to walk his two Labradors, speaking the dialogue of his fictional protagonists as he goes. He watches the rugby on Saturdays and enjoys the cricket at Lord's.

He says he needs a fairly quiet life to be able to concentrate the mind on crafting his stories, and admits that the process becomes more difficult with each book.

"The cliff gets steeper and the rock I'm trying to carry up gets heavier. I'm concerned more that this is going to be the end of the road and ideas and motivation will dry up. Thank heavens that hasn't happened yet."

■ Battle Sight Zero by Gerald Seymour, published by Hodder & Stoughton, £18.99.

REVIEWS

DREAM SEQUENCE

by Adam Foulds, Jonathan Cape, £14.99, available January 31

ACTOR Henry Banks is prepared to do all it takes to get the perfect next role, even if it means starving himself. But he doesn't realise he is already starring as male lead in the life of a stranger, Kristin, a recently divorced American vulnerable to the thrall of celebrity obsession.

Whether this drama is a tragedy or a romance, we only find out towards the novel's close when Kristin flies to London to confront her destiny. Meanwhile, the object of her affection continues remaking himself with each bigger and better role, but is left unsatisfied by fame's hollow fruition.

Foulds, previously shortlisted for the Man Booker prize, does not disappoint with this psychological exploration that tests the limits of control. It was difficult to invest emotionally in the characters; neither are particularly likeable, but their inevitable meeting gives the narrative a strong forward thrust that keeps you committed.

BOOK OF THE WEEK

JOHN Lanchester has written a grimly absorbing dystopian novel set in a very near and recognisable future, where the threats of global warming and anti-immigrant nationalism have been pushed to bleakly credible extremes. We understand that an environmental crisis has devastated the planet, making refugees of much of the global population and causing surviving territories like Britain to barricade themselves against intrusion. Our narrator is a young man doing his two-year tour of duty on The Wall, a forbidding fortified rampart that runs the length of the British coast in order to keep out the homeless of the world.

It's a boldly simple idea, executed with single-minded purpose. I'm puzzling over the ending but that's no criticism of a book that will stay with you long after you've finished it.

MY CONEY ISLAND

BABY by Billy O'Callaghan, Jonathan Cape, £14.99, ebook £9.99

THE second novel by Irishman Billy O'Callaghan tells the story of Michael and Caitlin, whose a long-running affair takes place in monthly trysts in the titular New York neighbourhood.

The heavy-handed opening of the pair heading to a dingy hotel, amid a winter storm as they find out about threats to their relationship – Caitlin may have to move with her husband's work and Michael's wife is seriously ill – is typical of a book which tends to be overwritten. The main characters fail to generate much sympathy, their doomed romance appearing clichéd. The description of losing a premature baby is one of the few sections which rings true in this melodrama, but if romance is what you're after, it ticks the box.

CALM THE F**K DOWN by Sarah Knight, Quercus, £14.99, ebook £7.49

IN 2018, the self-help book saw a real resurgence, with the unprecedented global success of Jordan Peterson's controversial 12 Rules For Life.

No stranger to the genre herself, Sarah Knight pitches in here with a contribution that might be less controversial, but is much more accessible. It is an expletive-riddled, irreverent look at how to reduce stress in the modern world.

It's hard to say whether this is a book primarily for advice or humour, so maybe the book could best be described as a parody with heart. The ultra-frivolous style won't be to everyone's taste, and one could argue Knight's advice boils down to a handful of inane platitudes ('Worrying is wasteful'), but at least you'll have a laugh or two as you 'mentally declutter your worryscale'.

HEALTH &amp; LIFESTYLE

HEALTH

Going grey gracefully?

GOING grey is a completely natural part of the ageing process, and it happens to most of us, but it can still be a shock to see your natural hair shade changing colour over time.

Most of us start to notice the first few greys creeping in by the time we hit our early 30s, but for some people, the process can start much earlier.

WHY DOES HAIR TURN GREY?

HAIR doesn't 'turn' a specific colour overnight. Once a hair follicle produces hair in the scalp, the colour is set for the rest of its growth.

To understand why hair goes silver, it's important to understand why it has colour in the first place. The answer lies in a special type of cell known as a melanocyte, which produce melanin pigments as they grow into the hair fibre.

Melanin comes in two forms, eumelanin (black or brown) and pheomelanin (reddish-yellow). Combinations of these two create the spectrum of natural human hair colours: Blonde, brown, black and red.

"Melanin-producing cells at the base of each hair follicle feed pigments through to the hair root," says Dr Sarah Brewer, Healthspan medical director (healthspan.co.uk) and author of Eat Well, Look Great (Eddison Books, £13.99).

As we get older, the pigment-producing melanocytes in our hair follicles gradually lose their ability to create melanin. When there are fewer pigment cells in a hair follicle, that hair will appear more transparent as it grows, appearing grey or silver.

CAN MY DIET HELP?

EXPERTS believe that a good diet can help to ward off the white. "Premature greying of hair has, in particular, been linked with a lack of certain B vitamins, folic acid or copper," says Dr Brewer.

She says that a good general rule is to follow a wholefood, nutrient-rich diet - avoid processed, convenience foods, and those with a lot of added salt to keep hair in good nick.

Demystifying
CROHN'S

It's one of the most common forms of inflammatory bowel disease but still relatively misunderstood. LIZ CONNOR finds out more

YOU'VE probably heard of Crohn's disease, but do you really know what it means? For starters, it's actually pretty common - every 30 minutes in the UK, someone is diagnosed with Crohn's or ulcerative colitis, the two main forms of inflammatory bowel disease (IBD).

These are lifelong conditions that can have a big impact, but Crohn's is often described as an 'invisible illness', because it's not always apparent on the outside exactly what's going on with somebody's health. In other words, people might not 'look' as unwell as they are, which can contribute to lack of understanding and awareness.

People with Crohn's disease commonly experience phases of intense abdominal pain, exhaustion, bloody diarrhoea, sore, swollen joints and a number of other unpleasant symptoms behind closed doors.

While Crohn's is a lifelong condition and can be difficult to live with at times, particularly when it comes to unpredictable flare-ups, the good news is that lots can be done to help manage it.

And if symptoms are well controlled, you can still live a full life with Crohn's.

Here, Jaina Shah, a spokesperson from Crohn's and Colitis UK, explains more...

WHAT IS CROHN'S DISEASE?

"CROHN'S is one of the two main forms of inflammatory bowel disease and is a lifelong disease of the gut," says Jaina.

"It is painful, debilitating and widely misunderstood - and there is no known cure."

She explains that for people with Crohn's, the immune system doesn't function as it's meant to.

"Your body starts attacking itself, causing ulcers and inflammation in the gut.

"Imagine having a wound that never heals, but only it's on the inside."

The condition doesn't just affect the gut though. "It can affect almost every part of your body and every aspect of your life - from your digestion to your energy levels and mental health," adds Jaina.

"People living with the condition face a lifetime of medication and, in many cases, major surgery."

While it's not entirely why Crohn's happens, research has suggested it's possible that a virus or bacterium may trigger it. When your immune system tries to fight off the invading microorganism, an abnormal immune response causes the immune system to attack the cells in the digestive tract too.

People with Crohn's suffer painful flare-ups

Studies have also found that Crohn's is more common in people who have family members with the disease, so genes may play a role in making some people more predisposed to developing it.

WHAT ARE THE SYMPTOMS?

CROHN'S tends to occur in episodes of flare-ups and periods of remission - although symptoms may be constant if the condition isn't being treated or well managed.

When the disease is active, the NHS says that the main symptoms are diarrhoea - which may come on very suddenly - stomach aches and cramps, and blood in your stools.

While every person is affected differently, fatigue is also a common symptom, along with weight loss (although that isn't always the case).

Some people with Crohn's disease also experience a high temperature, feeling sick, joint pain, sore eyes, patches of swollen skin (usually on the legs) and mouth ulcers.

HOW IS CROHN'S DISEASE DIAGNOSED?

IF you find blood in your stools, have diarrhoea for more than a week or experience frequent stomach aches, it's advised you book in to see your GP to get things checked.

Your doctor will try to find out what's causing your symptoms and may refer you for tests to check for Crohn's disease.

While you can be diagnosed at any age, Crohn's and Colitis UK reports that the median average age for Crohn's diagnosis is 29.5 years, while more than 25% of all new diagnoses are in children aged under 16.

An MRI or CT scan may be required to get a better understanding of what's going on in your intestines.

During the tests, you may be asked to take a colonoscopy, where a thin, flexible tube with a camera at the end is inserted into your bottom to look for inflammation in your bowel. A specialist may also take a biopsy, where tiny pieces of bowel tissue are removed during a colonoscopy and checked for signs of Crohn's disease.

HOW IS IT TREATED?

IF Crohn's is diagnosed, Jaina says that treatment will vary from person to person and can depend on the severity of the condition - although they will often have to take lifelong medication.

"The aim of medication is to reduce inflammation in the gut and bring relief from symptoms," says Jaina. "These drugs are often anti-inflammatory, and include steroids, immunosuppressants and biological drugs, taken in injection or infusion form."

In some cases, surgery may be required, to remove badly damaged sections of the bowel, for example. "Medication doesn't always work," says Jaina, "which means people with Crohn's can face surgery."

This includes bowel resections, operations that lead to the creation of a stoma and seton procedures."

Managing Crohn's disease is about lifestyle measures too, in order to help prevent flare-ups and minimise the impact of symptoms when they occur. This includes managing stress and mental wellbeing and getting plenty of sleep. Counselling can be very helpful too.

There's no set special diet for adults with Crohn's disease - but diet and nutrition are important, as people with Crohn's have an increased risk of nutritional deficiencies due to malabsorption, plus some people find certain foods can trigger symptoms.

Children may sometimes need to follow a special liquid diet to help control their symptoms - a GP will advise if this is necessary. A dietitian can help with managing diet and ensuring you're getting the balance of nutrients you need.

The unpredictable flare-ups of Crohn's disease can be hard to cope with emotionally and practically, so it may help to discuss your condition with your friends and family if you're struggling. Your GP can also point you in the direction of counselling and further emotional support.

Finally, make use of charities like Crohn's and Colitis UK (crohnsandcolitis.org.uk), which has details on its website of local support groups and community events.

Crohn's is an inflammatory bowel disease

As human beings our internal experiences can be very complicated.

In any given situation a vast range of thoughts, feelings, body sensations, urges, needs and desires may show up as we try to make sense of and navigate the world around us.

The three system model outlined below gives a simple framework for helping us to understand our experiences.

Threat system - This system identifies potential threats to our safety and triggers emotions which motivate us to either remove or get away from the threat.

It is in essence a self-protection system that triggers intense emotions such as anxiety, anger, shame and disgust which come with a whole host of bodily sensations such as racing heart, muscle tension and nausea.

This system works on a "better safe than sorry" principle. While this has served us well in terms of our survival, it can get us into problems when it becomes overactive and has us reacting to perceived threats even when there is no actual danger present.

Drive system - This system identifies goals and triggers emotions that motivate us to act in ways that help us to achieve those goals.

Three systems that help us to make sense of the world

Human beings are motivated to seek out and strive for the things we need in life such as food, somewhere to live, a decent job and loving relationships.

This system provides the energy, motivation and desire to go out and get these things. When this system gets out of balance, for example, through the use of drugs or as a result of mental illness, it can become overactive (driving us to gain more and more which often leads to frustration and disappointment) or underactive (when we lack the energy and motivation to pursue our goals).

Soothing system - This third system is crucial to our wellbeing as it enables us to achieve a sense of peacefulness and contentment that restores balance when we don't need to be defending ourselves against threats or striving to achieve our goals.

This system is closely linked to our experience of affection and kindness - when we experience the love and kindness of others and treat ourselves with self-compassion this system is activated, helping us to feel safe and calm.

Plenty of potential

BACK in the late 1970s and early 80s, The Chords were one of those blink-and-you've missed them bands who promised so much, but split up before they had chance to fulfil that potential.

Essentially a mod band – remember, parkas and Lambrettas with unfeasibly large numbers of mirrors were the big thing for a time – they were streetwise, socially aware and musically sharp as a knife.

They produced energetic pop-rock songs with catchy hooks and singalong choruses and it seemed a safe bet that their Top of the Pops appearance with Maybe Tomorrow wouldn't be their last.

More great singles and an album – So Far Away – followed but they never did make that big commercial breakthrough and, after sacking singer Billy Hassett and bringing in Kip Herring, it was all over.

Only it wasn't quite all over. Guitarist and songwriter Chris Pope was among those wondering what might have been and, from an overseas Chords reunion tour in 2012, The Chords UK were born.

Picking up the where The Chords left off, Chris, Mic Stoner, Kenny Cooper and Sandy Michie have released two albums and have forged a formidable live reputation, playing the old anthems, newly-penned songs and everything in between. You can see them at Phoenix Live in Harlow this Saturday (January 26) supported by The Hurricanes, with DJ Eddi Piller spinning some discs.

"The Chords got back together in 2012 for a tour to Australia and Japan and we had a great time because nobody had ever seen us there before," explained Chris.

"I was taking to Billy, the singer, who I formed the band with in the late 70s – we'd been on and off playing gigs every five years or so and I suggested I wanted to take it further. I wanted to take it back to England and keep going with it.

"The bass player who was with us at the time, Mic, is still with us but Billy can't do it as he lives in Japan."

Although he combines his musical activity with a day job nowadays, he remained active after the demise of The Chords in 1981.

Explaining why he wanted to revive the songs and spirit of his first band, he said: "I was doing some solo stuff, well it was a band called Pope, and I was doing four or five Chords songs in it and people were turning up and really getting into the way we were playing them so it was a bit of unfinished business really.

"The Chords were sacked off in 1981 before we'd done a second album. You always look back and think what if I'd put that stuff out and people had reacted to it?"

"I've done that on the last two albums we've done – I've put a couple of old songs on them and they've gone down really well, which is quite interesting really."

Trends and fads moved so quickly back in the late 70s and early 80s so being a mod band when new styles were emerging wasn't easy. One day you were flavour of the month, the next you were yesterday's leftovers.

The Chords UK are coming to Harlow

CHRIS POPE OF THE CHORDS TELLS MARTIN NEAL WHY HE WANTED TO REFORM THE BAND

"Musically I wanted to move on and do something different when Kip joined," explained Chris. "If you listen to our last two or three tracks, they're very different to the early ones.

"Also things moved very quickly at the time. In the early 80s people started to get into New Romantic stuff – electronic music and strange haircuts!

"We played rock and roll music and I stuck to my guns a bit and we carried on doing our own thing."

The Chords initially linked up with Sham 69 frontman Jimmy Pursey but by the time their first single, Now It's Gone, was released in 1979, the relationship had soured and they'd gone elsewhere.

"We fell out over a few things," said Chris. "We'd signed to his JP label but fell out two months later and ended up signing for Polydor so he started us off and we carried it through."

Was Pursey awkward to work with then?

"I think we were awkward as well," admitted Chris. "We did a gig with the Undertones and two of the Pistols and caused a bit of a riot. One thing led to another and we parted company."

As it turned out, second single Maybe Tomorrow was to be their biggest hit and somehow that didn't go any higher than No 40 in the charts. And two years later they'd gone their separate ways.

Chris doesn't seem entirely surprised that it was over so quickly though.

"The band was half-imploded when we started – we were four nutty guys going our own way – and you put all of that into the mix," he said. "I haven't got an answer to why Maybe Tomorrow didn't do anything. That's for other people to judge I suppose."

Though it only reached No 54, 1980's The British Way of Life is now seen as a mod anthem and with its honest look at changing times and cultures, it could have been written today.

"We've been asked to record it for a film this year with the same lyrics to see how, 40 years on, some things have changed and some things haven't changed," said Chris. "I like the song, I like the sentiments in it, and I think it works."

And even now when Chris writes a song, he's driven by real life and real experiences.

"I'm a full-time worker these days," he said. "I work for a charity in the City, so I go to work on the Northern Line so I write songs about going to work, the things we all go and do and about my local area. You write about what you know, don't you?"

A commuter with a 9-5 job he may be, but Chris still loves the thrill of getting up and performing to an audience.

Explaining what the audience can expect at Phoenix Live this weekend, he said: "A full-on rock and roll show with a bit of mod thrown in. We do all the old Chords songs, all the singles, and lot of stuff from the new album and stuff that's been hanging around.

"It's a nice blend because when you go and see a band you want to hear all the old stuff but you also want to hear what they are doing now because as a band, you've got to keep progressing."

5 key trends for fitness fans

Get in gear with the latest activewear looks. KATIE WRIGHT hits the shops

If you're the kind of gym-lover who is constantly in the know about the latest fitness trends and always up for trying a new class, whether it's Australian import F45, Peloton cycling, or the hardcore HIIT-yoga hybrid, chances are your activewear wardrobe is equally on-trend.

So as we get back into our exercise regimes following the festive lull, it's the perfect time to look at the fitness fashion trends that are making waves now, and update our workout wardrobes.

What's in store for 2019? Black takes a back seat for once, as bold prints and pretty colours make a splash.

But don't worry, if all-black-everything is your usual MO, there are enough muted hues and minimalist styles in the new season collections to satisfy even the most ardent colour-avoider.

Whatever your workout of choice, here are five fitnesswear trends that are set to take off in 2019...

1 LEOPARD PRINT

ANIMAL print was a huge trend on the autumn/winter catwalks, and now leopard spots have leapt into sportswear collections too.

Matching a printed sports bra and leggings is a fierce way to work the trend, or you could pair leopard leggings with a neon top for a pop of colour.

■ F&F at Tesco leopard print leggings, £16 (in store only)

2 STRAPPY DETAILING

IN an uber sweaty HIIT or hot yoga class, the aim is generally to wear as little as possible while still having a bit of support – strappy sports bras are perfect for this.

Multi-strap and lace-up details add interest to an outfit, so you can team an intricate bra with plain leggings for an easy activewear update.

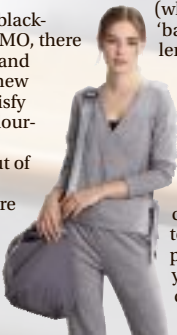

■ LORNA Jane Renew sports bra, £49, above left

■ FABLETICS Devore seamless sports bra, £26 (£10 for members), above right

3 BALLERINA STYLE

BALLET barre classes continue to be hugely popular (who doesn't want a peachy 'barre bum?'), and now ballerina style is trending too.

That means wrap tops for warm-ups and cool-downs, soft grey tones and lots of pale pink, so you can plie your way to the perfect derriere.

■ FatFace Athleisure Marnie Ballet wrap top, currently reduced to £31.50 from £42; Athleisure Esme tapered joggers, reduced to £31.50 from £42 (bag, stylist's own), above left

■ Fabletics Eva bomber jacket, £77 (£57 for members), above right

4 KHAKI

AT the other end of the style spectrum, khaki and camouflage print are here to get you pumped for brutal circuits classes.

Bootcamp veteran? Go head to toe camo.

New recruit? Start slowly with a dash of khaki.

■ New Look khaki camo print sports bralette, left, £12.99; khaki camo print sports leggings, £17.99

5 FLORALS

THINK floral print and sportswear don't go together? You might change your mind when you see this season's styles.

Rather than bright flower patterns, dark florals are blooming this spring, with graphic and abstract prints making these monochrome pieces easy to style with your existing separates.

■ Dare 2B X Julien Macdonald Women's Exacting fitness leggings mono floral white, £45, left

■ F&F at Tesco monochrome floral activewear tee, £12 (in store only), right

Boohoo Fit Premium back strap detail bra, reduced to £11.20 from £14; Fit Premium colourblock leggings, reduced to £14.40 from £18; chunky sole Dad trainers, reduced to £22.40 from £25

Clint Eastwood as Earl Stone in *The Mule
CLAIRE FOLGER

THE MULE (15) ★★★★★

Clint Eastwood refuses to follow Robert Redford's lead and glide serenely into self-imposed retirement as he directs and stars in a gently paced thriller inspired by an outlandish true story of opportunistic criminal enterprise.

Adapted for the screen with an exceedingly heavy hand by Nick Schenk, who penned Eastwood's 2008 drama Gran Torino, The Mule relies on its leading man to inject life into a plodding tale of fractured families and economic strife.

The 88-year-old Oscar winner duly obliges, investing his politically incorrect old coot with rascally charm and old-fashioned grit, which allows a fallen family man to ferry hundreds of kilos of cocaine across Illinois without arousing the suspicions of law enforcement.

Schenk's linear script hammers home the lead character's failings as a husband and father with the subtlety of a battering ram to a rickety wooden door, engineering pointed and frosty conversations between family members.

The trickle of bad blood is neatly and conveniently staunches before the end credits roll, suggesting that crime pays to salve deep emotional wounds.

Nicole Kidman as Erin Bell in *The Destroyer
SABRINA LANTOS

DESTROYER (15) ★★★★★

A tragically flawed Los Angeles police detective seeks redemption on the mean streets where she fell from grace in director Karyn Kusama's gritty crime thriller.

Written by Phil Hay and Matt Manfredi, Destroyer opens on the face of a woman, bathed in morning sunlight, regaining consciousness in the front seat of her car.

Heavy circles of tiredness hang under her blinking eyes, her teeth are stained, the skin of her dry lips slightly cracked in the scorching heat and tumbles of greying hair frame her haggard features.

Buried beneath all that despair is chameleonic Oscar winner Nicole Kidman, whose delivers a fearless and uncompromising performance that elevates and illuminates Kusama's uneven character study.

Power grab

Christian Bale stars as Dick Cheney in Adam McKay's *Vice

VICE (15)

WRITTEN and directed by Adam McKay, whose previous film The Big Short brilliantly dramatised the 2008 global financial crisis, Vice nervously prowls the corridors of power in Washington D.C. to satirise another true story of malicious meddling and unabashed self-interest.

"Or as true as it can be given that Dick Cheney is one of the most secretive leaders in history," quips an opening title card, which establishes the irreverent tone of a breakneck tour through chapters of recent history including the Gulf War and the September 11 attacks.

For the opening hour, Vice is a briskly paced and engrossing portrait of ambition, electrified by an Oscar-worthy performance from Christian Bale, who gained 40 pounds to portray Cheney.

The Haverfordwest-born actor completes his startling transformation with more than 100 pieces of prosthetic make-up to replicate the jowls, jawline and distinctive nose of his subject, who served as vice president to George W. Bush between 2001 and 2009.

Once Cheney achieves his goals, McKay's film leaches dramatic tension.

Narrated by an everyman called Kurt (Jesse Plemons), whose importance becomes clear in the film's final act, Vice opens in 1963 Wyoming where the young Dick Cheney (Bale) works on the power lines and drinks to excess.

"Back then, they would have called a guy like him a ne'er-do-well. In today's parlance, they would just call him a dirt bag," explains Kurt.

Dick is a crushing disappointment to 21-year-old sweetheart Lynne (Amy Adams), whose father also lives by the bottle, and she refuses to let history repeat.

"I love you, Lynne," implores Dick.

"Then prove it!" she barks.

In response, Dick secures an internment at the White House where he assiduously aligns himself with Republican Congressman Donald Rumsfeld (Steve Carell).

By playing the waiting game on Capitol Hill, Dick manoeuvres himself into the position of running mate to George W. Bush (Sam Rockwell) during the 2000 US presidential election.

Haunted by his wife's words ("When you have power, people will try to take it from you. Always") Dick positions allies such as Rumsfeld, Scooter Libby (Justin Kirk) and legal counsel David Addington (Don McManus) in key positions to stop that happening.

Vice takes aim at a dizzying array of easy targets and hits the majority.

Like Gary Oldman's tour-de-force theatrics in Darkest Hour, Bale slips beneath the skin of his political puppetmaster with elan, staring defiantly at the camera as he persuades Bush to expand the remit of a vice president so he can "handle the more mundane jobs... military, energy and foreign policy".

Adams is equally compelling as a steely spouse, who expects her man to step up, seize his destiny by the throat and squeeze, hard.

GARDENS

WATCH THE BIRDIES

AS BIG GARDEN BIRDWATCH CELEBRATES ITS 40TH ANNIVERSARY, THE RSPB REVEALS SOME LESS OBVIOUS SPECIES TO KEEP AN EYE OUT FOR. BY HANNAH STEPHENSON

Some 130 million birds have been counted during the last 40 years of Big Garden Birdwatch, giving the RSPB an astonishing amount of insight into how our wildlife is faring.

While numbers of blackbirds, house sparrows, song thrush, chaffinches and greenfinch have declined over the past four decades, numbers are up on wood pigeons, coal tits, collared doves and magpie.

Since it began, the survey – which invites the public to spend an hour watching and recording the birds in their garden or local green space, then send their results to the RSPB – has highlighted the winners and losers in the garden bird world.

So, you might see plenty of pigeons and magpies, but what are the more unusual varieties you could still spot? The RSPB says look out for these...

1. Waxwing

These starling-sized short-legged birds, with an upstanding, pointed crest, have black throats and wings, with white yellow and red markings and yellow-tipped tails. They don't breed in the UK but are winter visitors, appearing between October and March. In some winters, larger numbers arrive in search of their favourite food – red berries. These events are known as "irruptions" and occur in years when the abundance of berries is too low.

As waxwings will travel long distances in search of food, when they find a suitable tree or bush, they gorge themselves on the fruit. Our native rowan tree is their favourite, but they will happily feast on other red berries such as hawthorn, pyracantha, cotoneaster or rosehips too. This means they can often be found in supermarket car parks.

Waxwings are generally not shy and you can get incredible views up close as they're feeding. They can also be tempted into your garden by cutting apples in half and sticking them onto tree branches or even planting some berry-laden shrubs.

2. Redwing

From the thrush family, the redwing is a winter visitor and enjoys feasting on the seasonal berries the UK's hedgerows, gardens and parks have to offer. Its creamy strip above the eye and orange-red patches under its wings make it distinctive.

Redwings roam across the UK's countryside, feeding in fields and hedgerows but rarely visiting gardens – except in the coldest weather, when snow covers the fields. Only a few pairs nest in the UK and they feed on berries and worms.

They arrive from September, with most in October and November. They leave again in March and April, although occasionally birds stay later. The very small breeding population in the UK means that birds can be seen all year round. When it's really cold, place apples and pears (cut into half) on your lawn to attract redwings to your garden, along with berry-producing bushes like hawthorn.

3. Fieldfare

Another member of the thrush family, the fieldfare's UK conservation status is red, the highest conservation priority, meaning that the species is globally threatened, and that there's been a severe decline in the UK breeding population over the last 25 years or longer.

They are large, colourful thrushes which are very social birds, spending the winter in flocks of anything from a dozen to several hundred strong. They feed on insects, worms and berries, standing very upright and moving forward with purposeful hops.

You're most likely to see them in the countryside along hawthorn hedges and in fields. In late winter, they may come into gardens during more severe weather, when snow covers the countryside.

4. Reed bunting

The UK population of reed buntings fell by 31% between 1970 and 2007. This decline has probably been caused by the reduction of damp habitats and food sources on farmland, although there has been a partial recovery over the last 15 years.

Sparrow-sized but slim, with a long, deeply notched tail, the male has a black head, white collar and a drooping moustache. Females and winter males have a streaked head. In flight, the tail looks black with broad, white edges. Provide seed food through the winter with wild bird seed mixtures. When singing, the male is usually perched on top of a bush or reed.

Reed buntings usually only visit gardens in winter or late spring. The majority will be UK residents but a small number may be migrants from Scandinavia. When they do move around, they don't go very far, so they are more likely to be found in rural gardens than in urban areas. The lack of available seeds in the winter is the reason they are more likely to be seen in gardens in the cold season.

5. Redpoll

This tiny finch is only slightly bigger than a blue tit. It is streaky and brown with patches of red on its head and sometimes on its breast. They like to hang upside down to feed in trees. They eat seeds, particularly of birch and alder, plus plants like willow herb and sorrel, but they also visit bird feeders.

In gardens, the best food by far to attract redpolls is nyjer seed, which they'll either take from a special nyjer feeder (which has tiny seed ports) or direct from the ground, a table or ground tray.

In many areas, winter is the easiest time to see redpolls, after the trees have lost their leaves. They are very gregarious and flocks can number over 100. Having multiple finch feeders for them will allow you to host more redpolls in your garden.

HOW TO GET INVOLVED

This year's Big Garden Birdwatch takes place from January 26-28. To take part, watch the birds in your garden or local park for one hour at some point over the three days, and then send your recordings to the RSPB.

For your FREE 40th anniversary Big Garden Birdwatch pack, which includes a bird identification chart, plus RSPB shop voucher and advice to help you attract wildlife to your garden, text BIRD to 70030 or visit rspb.org.uk/birdwatch.

TABLE TOPPERS

COMPARE the pictures of these two "marble" table tops. Each is an antique, a souvenir of a Grand Tour and worth around £20,000, but one is a ringer, although there's nothing fraudulent about it.

It's not the one inlaid with radiating concentric panels with an amusing image of a mallard swimming among the reeds of a duck pond.

The design was made up of 96 pieces of specimen marbles and hardstones including lapis-lazuli, malachite, Blue John, and Siena and Portor marbles.

And it once belonged to the actor Dirk Bogarde, no less.

The other, equally as beautiful and decorated with a pastoral landscape panel depicting peasants tending cows, a horse and sheep, with a boat on a river and buildings beyond, appears to be inlaid in exactly the same way as the other. But marble it ain't.

It's a tabletop, true enough, but it was decorated using a technique called scagliola - Italian for "chips" - but instead of a pattern using costly and time-consuming pieces of marble, the design is created using a type of gypsum plaster mixed with glue.

Different natural pigments give the various veins and colours of specimen marble and the resulting pastes are applied to pictures and patterns carved into the table top then polished to a smooth, shiny finish.

What makes this example even more significant is the tiny diamond-shaped panel to the upper right of central scene. It reads "Petro. Belloni. Vallumbrosa. A Florentia. F. Anno. D 1754".

Don Pietro Belloni, who flourished briefly from 1740 to 1760, was a monk

This week we examine two beautiful 'marble' tabletops and discover the secrets of their talented makers at the monastery of Vallombrosa near Florence, and an assistant to the Abbot Don Enrico Hugford (1697-1771). Enrico pioneered the art of scagliola, advancing it as a convincing substitute for the mosaic marble pieces made famous by the commissions from the wealthy Medici family.

Both tabletops are as prized today return was part of the fun.

The scagliola example illustrated is previously undocumented but is believed to be one of a number commissioned from Belloni by a group of friends who were in Rome in the middle of the 18th century.

Actor Dirk Bogarde

The group comprised Joseph Leeson, Earl of Milltown, of Russborough House and Ralph Howard, Viscount Wicklow, of Shelton Abbey, both County Wicklow; Robert Clements Earl of Leitrim, of Killadon, County Mayo and Sir Matthew Fetherstonhaugh of Uppark, West Sussex.

Their similar tastes are indicated by the fact while in Rome, each commissioned landscape paintings by Claude Joseph Vernet and had their portraits painted by Pompeo Batoni.

Belloni was reputedly slow in achieving such detailed works. In a letter from Sir Horace Mann, the British minister in Florence, to his friend the antiquarian Horace Walpole, himself a Grand Tourer, dated July 11, 1747, Mann writes: "Here is a scholar of his (Hugford) but vastly inferior to him and so slow in working that he has been almost three years about a pair for a Mr Leson (sic) and requires six months more".

The rare mid-18th century Italian Florentine Grand Tour scagliola table top by Don Pietro Belloni, sold for £25,000

There are only seven documented table tops by Belloni. The one illustrated here is presumably the eighth and possibly the one missing from the pair made for Lord Clements. It came into its present ownership in 1972, when it was purchased from a London dealer, and was one of the featured lots in a sale of fine furniture at Salisbury, Wiltshire, auctioneers Woolley & Wallis. It sold to an overseas telephone bidder for £25,000.

Dirk Bogarde's table was another highlight of the same auction. Seen in photographs of Nore, the Hollywood idol's country house in Sussex, where he lived from 1962 to 1965, it was treasured enough for him to take it with him when he moved to all his subsequent homes, including his beloved Clermont, the former French farmhouse in Provence, where he lived from 1970 until 1986.

Over the years many leading figures from the world of art and entertainment would have more than likely sat around it, including such stars as Ingrid Bergman, Judy Garland, Vivien Leigh, Richard Attenborough, Charlotte Rampling and Elton John.

Bogarde's final visitor, on the eve of his death in May 1999, was Lauren Bacall, who came for tea at his London flat.

Interestingly, the centre of this table, the panel decorated with the swimming mallard, is an example of micromosaic marble, a term reputedly coined by Sir Arthur Gilbert, who assembled one of the largest collections now on loan to the Victoria and Albert Museum.

The technique was first developed at the end of the 18th century in the Vatican Mosaic Workshop in which tiny, individual pieces of different coloured marble, known as tesserae, were arranged in a mosaic of patterns or images.

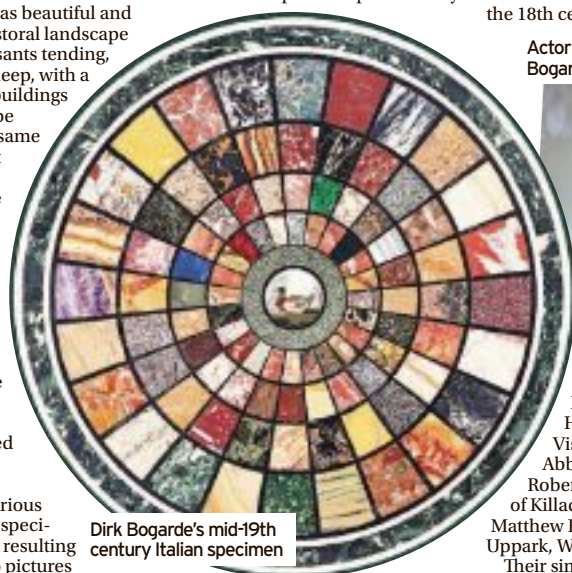

Some tesserae were so small that some micromosaics contained more than 5,000 per square inch and had to be assembled under a microscope.

In the late 18th century, some Vatican mosaicists began to take on private commissions and started workshops of their own, selling micromosaics to dealers and Grand Tourists.

Sadly, most are unsigned.

Their popularity soon spread and gold boxes, jewellery and wall panels were popular with Victorian tourists. The industry continues today.

The Bogarde table, from the collection of the well-known barrister and Oxford fellow Sir Jeremy Lever QC, sold to a continental buyer for £17,500.

STYLISH NEW RAPIDE

BY ROBIN ROBERTS

Fortunate enough to buy a high performance coupe, the Aston Martin Rapide S will surprise and must be on your list.

Not only does it carry the highly desirable Aston Martin name, but the sleek coupe hides four passenger doors and four figure-hugging seats with reasonable room inside so it's more practical than you might expect, and the boot space is also eye-opening.

The successor to the original Rapide from 2010, the S version was launched four years ago but it can still match newer rivals with its head-turning styling and breathtaking performance.

It's a big car over 5m long but you need that to fit in the 6.0-litre V12 engine, four seats and still have room to relax as you waft along country or main roads.

The Rapide S was the first to be fitted with a new eight-speed ZF automatic gearbox with a compact design and light weight feeding the 560PS to the rear wheels and it is a perfect match to the big engine.

Gear changes are quick, very smooth, and can be left to shuffle about or brought into play with paddles on the steering column. The long gearing also means the Rapide S fuel consumption is reduced over the previous model and we saw up to 24mpg before calculating an average 22mpg.

Behind the wheel the feedback is remarkably good, absolutely the right weight for any situation, even if the turning circle is quite big in town or when parking and it did not suffer any vibration or kickback.

A car with all this power underfoot requires the massive brakes of the Rapide S and it needed only gradually increasing pressure on the pedal to bring about a very rapid deceleration from any speed with utter control and no sign of fading. The parking brake also securely held it.

The adjustable suspension has three settings and permits a finely tuned set up to match prevailing road or driving preferences so you're not stuck with a wallowing wagon or a track-tuned boneshaker as in some rivals. It really is highly sophisticated in the suspension department.

Secondary controls are grouped around the steering column and wheel, or on the big central console finished in smart piano black, and while they look a bit too glitzy for my taste, they are well placed and straightforward to understand and use. The automatic transmission is selected via buttons on the upper face of the console and elementary.

I liked the big instruments directly in front of the driver for road and engine speed and they clearly displayed readings. The heating and ventilation had smaller knobs but the system worked very well, quickly warming or chilling the cabin and maintaining a desired temperature.

Oddments room was modest with slim compartments and you really have to think about what you might want to take and keep close in the cabin but the nominal boot space was good behind the deep rear sill under the fifth door and the capacity more than doubled when the rear seat-backs were dropped, although the floor was not flat.

In any coupe, visibility is an issue and the Rapide S was no exception with only a limited view through the back window or to the rear flanks so it has a full set of sensors but no camera. The view to sides and front was much better and the very bright headlights and big wipers did good jobs.

The insulation of the cabin is cosy and the four seats really hold you very well and with excellent support in front but less under the thighs in the back two bucket seats. There is plenty of adjustment range on the front pair but anyone over a teenager or short adult in the back would need some compromise from a front seat occupant to be comfortable on a long journey.

The Aston Martin Rapide S makes a glorious sound when started and just the right amount of engine noise permeates the passenger space on the move, even when the throttle pedal is pushed hard. There are wonderful deep bellows to the engine note and crackles as you back off but they are all very satisfying.

Less so is the amount of road rumble and suspension bump thump which finds its way into the car. They are big wheels and tyres in closely fitting wheel arches so the sound is magnified. On smooth roads it's not a problem or noticeable in particular, but over the UK's poorer tarmac terrain it does become intrusive. Wind and other mechanical noises are almost silent so the road noise, when it occurs, stands out.

We did not have an opportunity to test the top speed of the Rapide S but it was certainly very quick and composed from rest to high speed and it maintained the legal maximum 70mph with a resigned and relaxed gait which also stretched the economy.

Owning an Aston Martin Rapide S would not be cheap with about £120 needed to refuel it for about 450 miles at a time but there are few better ways to cover distance in a real grand tourer tradition.

BY DAVID WARD

LUXURY always comes at a price in the car world and when Toyota's up-market brand Lexus launched a seven-seater version of their RX Sports Utility Vehicle some motorists no doubt winced at its £61,995 price tag.

Yet for buyers looking at seems to be an ever growing sector of big SUVs, it's still good value for money when compared to rivals, mainly from German car makers.

In truth many such buyers often opt for the alternative five-seater versions, simply because those two extra small seats in effectively the boot are more child-like size rather than for adults and in the case of this Lexus RX save themselves over two grand in the process.

To gain those extra pair of rear Lexus engineers added an extra 110mm behind the rear wheels and to make its young occupants not having any inferior complex the seats are leather like the rest in the car plus they've their own air conditioning too.

Getting in and out of that third row has often been a bugbear for passengers in the past but credit to the Lexus backroom team the second row of seats bow and slide at the touch of an electric button for easy access.

It's all clever stuff and for the family man with toddlers it's an ideal solution and even when occupied there's still 495 litres of boot space to play which increases to 966 litres with the second row of seats down too.

The question of what to do with the tonneau bar when needing all that extra luggage space again this RX L Premier, as it's called, can simply be solved by storing it under the boot floor.

Aside from all such practicalities the real truth is that this new flagship from Lexus is the definitely 'the bee's knees' when it comes to ultra luxury and comfort and in my view in this respect best of the current bunch of big SUVs on the market.

For starters it's luxuriously kitted out with top quality leather and the like in terms of furnishings and fittings making it probably the best interior finish in its class and equally so for the ride with excellent lumbar supporting seats (choice of heated or cooled in the front) and the whole ambience of the cabin is one of sheer luxury.

Toyota/Lexus have stuck to the hybrid route for some time and the power train in this RX L is exceptionally good, powered by a 3.5-litre V6 petrol engine supported by two electric motors that's smooth and responsive and this model has the added advantage of opting for four-wheel-drive mode too.

Combined power output is 303bhp (259bhp from the naturally aspirated petrol engine) with the power delivered so smoothly and efficiently and superior to most rivals.

Start up is in purely electric mode and once the driver pushed the accelerator down the petrol engine takes over in what is a seamless transaction and for any newcomer to the hybrid world this may seem strange initially but within a short while the switch between electric and petrol power will become so natural.

The ride is good with the suspension coping so easily with the more uneven road surfaces and for the driver the steering is precise with plenty of feedback too.

It may seem incredible that with a car weighing almost 2.3 tonnes it might appear to be a real heavy-weight out on the road but in fact it doesn't feel as you are driving such a big car.

In town and city stop/start traffic the hybrid comes into its own and makes driving such a large car in difficult traffic conditions so easy and relaxing with the CVT transmission again so smooth and quiet moving up and down the gears.

Out of all the congestion and driving at motorway speeds the Lexus comes into its own as an outstanding long distant cruiser, soaking up the miles with total ease with quietness and refinement.

Lexus claim the combined mpg is 47.1 dropping to 44.8mpg in town so achieving spot on 50mpg on two decent long runs was remarkable and again dropping to the 45.2mpg mark with two tortuous cross London city drives.

Most of the driving was on Eco mode and with an EV mode button the driver can switch the car to all electric power meaning in city traffic it can easily be driven at low speeds and over short distances - the big advantage of being a full hybrid car.

Final point about the cabin and in particular for the driver the controls and dials are easy to use as is the infotainment screen with everything at the finger tip, excellent navigation system, loads of on-board safety features and many electronic driving aids as one would expect in a car of this stature.

Yes, it's expensive but no more so than rival SUVs but as they old saying goes 'you do get an awful lot of motor car for your money.'

Most buyers will probably do it on attractive PCP deals while as a company car with a full hybrid system it means the tax man will take less each month.

As for the choice of five- or seven-seater it's really down to individual choice and circumstances because driving either is much the same - either way as a buyer you won't be disappointed in my view.

FIRST DRIVE

Jaguar XJ50

FIFTY UP FOR XJ

BY CHRIS RUSSON

IT'S 50 years since Jaguar launched the XJ saloon and while the car may have changed significantly over eight generations it remains the flagship of the Fast Cat brand.

And to mark half a century of production the British car maker is releasing a special edition run of XJ50 models – decked out to the nines.

Like all other versions of the XJ on sale in the UK it is diesel only and powered by a 3.0-litre V6 developing a healthy 300ps.

Priced from £74,280 in short wheelbase form or £77,280 for the long wheelbase model we tried, it is sumptuously equipped and sits at the top of the current XJ line up.

Jaguar first introduced diesels back in 2003 on the now defunct X-Type and since then they have featured in all its saloons and estates and the latest is as clean as they come with emissions of just 155g/km.

Compare that to the 264g/km CO2 rating of the 5.0-litre V8 version of the XJ and the difference in fuel economy is obvious. The XJ50 has an official fuel figure of 48 miles per gallon – and that's almost twice as many miles per tank as you would get from the V8.

Real world use saw an average return close on 40mpg from the XJ and it's no slouch either with a 0 to 60 time of 5.9 seconds and a maximum of 155mph.

The XJ50 is based on the Premium Luxury version of the XJ and comes with the likes of quilted soft leather upholstery, heated and cooled front seats, privacy glass and plenty commemorative reminders of its lineage such as illuminated XJ50 kickplates.

Other distinctive features include front and rear bumpers from Autobiography models, 20-inch alloys and XJ50 badging on the boot and front wings.

There's also a high end 825 Watt Meridian surround sound system, blind spot and reverse traffic warnings and a 360 degree parking camera set up while in the back the XJ50 has a fold-down central armrest, individual air conditioning controls and fold out display screens and picnic tables.

Options on the XJ50 we tried included an upgraded sound system at more than £4,000, a dual view touchscreen at £615 and parking assist technology which added another £1,190 taking the total to a heady £90,625.

That places the special XJ well and truly in luxury limousine territory and for a car that was first seen almost 10 years ago it can still hold its own against the likes of the Mercedes

S-Class and Audi A8.

That said, the XJ is showing its age and a new model which is likely to include electric power is in the wings.

With Jaguar and sister brand Land Rover having to compete in a market that has seen a sharp reduction in diesel sales and a slump in global demand such a power option is vital.

Nevertheless, the XJ50 is a splendid example of the company's expertise.

What started back in September 1968 with the first XJ went on to spawn the second generation model in 1973, the third in 79, the XJ40 in 86 to be followed in the 90s with the X300, the X308 in 98 and the X35d in 2003 before the arrival of the current X351 in 2009.

The XJ has become a marker for British innovation. Over the years it has been the world's only mass-produced 12-cylinder four-door car and, with a top speed of 140mph it was also the fastest four-seater of its time. The Series 2 was the first to offer a two-door coupe model in 1975 and the XJ40, in production for eight years from 1986, introduced the celebrated 'J' gate gear shifter and self-levelling suspension.

An aluminium monocoque bodyshell helped reduce the XJ's weight by 40 per cent from 2003, before the current XJ model brought additional technologies such as all-wheel drive and a virtual instrument cluster.

And its success has not been confined to the road appearing in a number of hit movies including Love Actually, The Long Good Friday and in James Bond films.

As Ian Callum, Jaguar's design director who created the current model, said: "Spanning half a century, the Jaguar XJ remains true to its heritage with a wonderful balance of beautiful design, intelligent performance and indulgent luxury that ensures it stands out from the crowd. This is a car worth celebrating and the XJ50 pays homage to a giant within the Jaguar brand that we believe is one of the world's most stylish sporting saloons."

That all puts the big Jaguar saloon in an enviable position of being loved by the rich and famous as much as the everyday driver and business executive – qualities the new XJ is sure to embody.

Lost & Found - Pets

BLACK AND WHITE CAT MISSING FROM WORMLEY Please help us bring our little cat 'Flash' home. Went missing on Saturday 12th January from Wormley, last seen around 7pm. Was reported to us from a neighbour yesterday, that on Saturday night a lady knocked on their door asking for a bag to put a deceased cat into. Apparently the cat had been hit pretty badly by a car and was found on WORMLEY HIGH ROAD, near 'The Queens Head' pub. The lady had said she was taking the cat to a vets, however none of the vets in Harlow, Ware, Hertford, Enfield, Cheshunt, Waltham cross, Broxbourne

ETC have had a cat handed in. We're hoping this cat wasn't our flash however if it was we just want him home where he should be. Flash is about a year and a half old, quite small, hasn't been neutered/ micro-chipped yet and doesn't have a collar on. He's black with a white chest and belly, white feet, and a white stripe on his nose. Please if anyone knows anything please ring me as soon as possible, we just want our flash home. My parents are devastated and look at our cats like children, they feel like they've lost a child. Please help us, if you were around Wormley high road on Saturday night, please come forward with any information! If anyone is or around Wormley has any sheds or garages please check them for us. If you have any information please call us on 07920872257 Thank you. 07920872257 or 07534561085

HARLOW Town made a real fight of it but came away empty handed as they lost out 5-3 to second placed Dorking Wanderers at Meadowbank on Saturday.

The hosts had to come back from being behind after taking an eighth minute lead through Tom Richards.

Matt Foy equalised after 21 minutes and six minutes after half-time, Emile Acquah put the Hawks in front.

Dorking's David Ray levelled five minutes later, but Foy restored the Hawks' lead with his second on 70 minutes.

Ray pulled Dorking back on terms again nine minutes later and then substitute Matt Briggs and Luke Moore sealed the victory with goals right at the death.
